

HON. S. W. T. LANHAM

Addressed a Large Audience
This AfternoonAt the City Hall—Candidate for Governor.
Speaking When the News Went to Press

Hon. S. W. T. Lanham, of Weatherford, was introduced to a large audience at the city hall this afternoon by Jno. W. Davis Esq.

Mr. Lanham was greeted with hearty applause when he stepped to the front and began his address.

He began by referring to the responsibilities and gravities attached to the gubernatorial chair. Since he had begun this campaign he had looked out on the broad field and contemplated the responsibilities involved, and was actuated in his aspirations by patriotic motives.

He had had the honor of representing for a decade a powerful and worthy constituency in the congress of the United States.

Aristotle had said that a citizen was one who participated in legislative tribunals of a state, but, in this country a citizen was a constituency. It was an honor in ancient times to say "I am a Roman citizen," but it is a greater honor now to be an American citizen. It was the duty of every good citizen in this country to contribute as far as in him lieth, the building up of our civilization and combat everything that threatens the downfall of our social institutions.

Passing from the citizen he came to the state, which was collectively a citizen. Federal government may be aggressive, but it has only such powers as are delegated by the states and the people.

He referred in terms of drastic humor to those people whom, he said, did not like to see a man announce for any office whatever, unless he discussed the national currency. It was indeed beneath the dignity of many people to discuss such very small things as state issues—they must be authorities on great subjects that attracted the attention of John Stuart Mill—to announce his position on these issues and discuss them in preference to anything else, was required of every Populist candidate for justice of the peace. [Great laughter.]

The Democratic party was noted for the individuality of its members, and one of the main causes of its reverses was lack of community unity. The Republican party was a compact organization, well disciplined, and the masses in the party, unlike the Democrats, were subservient to its leaders. He then, by way of illustration, recalled how Reed bossed his men in the house, who wagged when he said wag and obeyed unanimously his every mandate. The speaker referred in eulogistic terms to the Democratic party. It had defeated the federal election bill. It had prepared a bill for redeeming the war tax, which he hoped would soon receive signature of Grover Cleveland. He spoke in high terms of Cleveland, several times during the course of his remarks.

The speaker said he stood ready to express himself on any issue before the people. He thought that a man who declined to do such was unworthy the office of governor. He believed in the free and unlimited coinage of silver. Mr. Cleveland held different views. "But, gentlemen," he said, "I don't constitute the Democratic party, and I don't think Cleveland is actuated by anything but honest and patriotic motives. If you expect from me a malediction on Grover Cleveland, I shall surrender my claims for the governorship of Texas." "I love the Democratic party because it has preserved your liberties." "At the time of the formation of our government it was a higher duty to be a citizen of the state than the Union. Coming down to state issues, he thought the present house of representatives was too large numerically. The number of members should be reduced to about 75, the sessions of the legislature should be longer and held oftener, and the legislators should receive compensation sufficient to induce them to serve. This was economy, and if not, it would be in the long run. He did not believe there was a law on our statute books antagonistic to corporations, railways and capital. He did not think such enterprises should be retarded, but the interests of the people should be assiduously guarded, and railway companies should not be allowed to charge extortionate freight rates. His humorous exhortations of the Third party, which he termed "the three party," elicited much laughter and applause.

He was still speaking when The News went to press.

A COMING BOOK

And a Valuable One for Waco—Cutter's Guide.

Charles Cutter of Hot Springs, author and publisher of Cutter's Guides to Hot Springs, Ark.; Mt. Clemens, Mich.; Eureka Springs, Ark.; Mineral Wells, Texas, and other health resorts, is now at work on a Guide to Waco. It is to contain between forty and fifty illustrations of the best buildings in the city, public and private, views of the city from Provident Heights, principal streets, churches, colleges, schools, flowing wells, etc. It is to be the handsomest and most complete work ever issued in the interest of Waco. The citizens of Hot Springs give "Cutter's Guide" to that famous resort the credit of having done more to advertise that city than all other mediums combined; and he has a book full of testimonials to that effect from the leading citizens of Hot Springs, and representing all lines of business. Mr. Cutter promises a better guide for Waco than he has ever issued.

The following is a partial list of the subscribers to his Waco Guide, and the number of copies subscribed for. A full list will be published when completed:

Roasting ears will soon be brought in from the farms adjacent to the city regularly. A dozen well grown roasting ears in excellent condition from the farm of Mr. Sol Rice about a mile north of Waco, were shown a News reporter last night.

A negro woman who was doing some washing for a lady on South Sixth street yesterday afternoon, became enraged because her compensation was reduced on account of some missing articles, clothing which she could not account for, and marched off with a wheelbarrow in the lady's yard. The barrow was recovered by Officer Hopson, but the negro has not been heard of.

The Waco Maennerchor, a German musical association, which was organized temporarily last week, has perfected permanent organization and elected the following officers: F. Lueders, president; H. E. Ambold, vice president; L. Lemke, secretary; Otto Berry, treasurer; Prof. Mosler, leader. The association will meet tonight at the Union house, corner of Eighth and Jackson streets.

"I tell you boys these cars are dreadfully hot and uncomfortable, but when we got down to Waco and are assigned to one of those pleasant, cool rooms at the Hotel Royal we will be all O. K." The writer overheard the above on a south bound Missouri, Kansas and Texas train this morning as he was returning from Fort Worth. The remark was made by a well known traveling man who is always on the lookout for comfort.
